Suffolk Downs casino could mean $52M a year for Hub

Playing its cards right. A deal finalized between the city and the racetrack yesterday also promises 4,000 permanent jobs, half of which must be given to Boston residents. Don't double down yet. Voters must approve the deal and the project must be selected for the one casino license in Greater Boston. City touts promise of cash in casino deal Placing bets. Voters in Boston and Revere will soon have to vote on the agreement.

Boston and Suffolk Downs have put their cards on the table, and soon it will be the voters' turn to bet on a proposed casino that could net Boston tens of millions of dollars in annual payments.

Officials from the city and the racetrack announced yesterday that the sides reached a deal on a host community agreement regarding the proposed casino. Last year, officials from Caesars Entertainment and Suffolk Downs unveiled plans for a $1 billion casino and hotel at the track that is located on the East Boston and Revere border.

Among the deals worked out in the 138-page agreement is a section that outlines payments to the city. The city said Boston is projected to receive $52 million annually, after stabilization and based on anticipated gross gaming revenue. Regardless of revenue, the city will never receive less than $32 million annually.

A $33.4 million up-front payment will be made to the city specifically for improvements to East Boston.

"This agreement will transform my neighborhood," said City Councilor Sal LaMattina. "It will save jobs … it will provide jobs — hundreds of jobs — to people that live in my neighborhood. … This is a big day for my neighborhood."

The agreement also states that the casino should have 4,000 permanent jobs at its completion and for the remainder of the license term. Of those hired for the jobs, 50 percent should be from Boston, according to the agreement.

While Boston reached an agreement with Suffolk Downs, Revere must also come to a deal. Joe O'Donnell, principal owner of Suffolk Downs, said that he expects a deal with Revere to be finalized this week.

While officials have reached an agreement, it must still be approved by voters. Mayor Thomas Menino said he supports an East Boston-only vote.

Even if residents approve the agreement, Suffolk Downs and Caesars still have to compete for the casino license in the Greater Boston area. Las Vegas mogul Steve Wynn has already reached an agreement with Everett, and there is also a deal being worked out between Milford and Foxwoods.

"The agreement … has more revenue, more guaranteed jobs and more protections than any other agreement in the region and the commonwealth." Menino

Man fights to keep US flag in his condo window

Fort Point patriot.
A condo owner may be fined for flying an American flag.

A Fort Point man is fighting his condo association after they notified him that his American flag violated the building's white-curtains-only policy.

Mark DiGiovanni, 52, told the Boston Herald that he was given a "gentle reminder" Monday by the group that he'd start accruing $25-per-day penalties for breaking the curtain rule if he does not remove the 6-by-10 flag that hangs in his FP3 unit's window.

But DiGiovanni says according to the 2005 federal Freedom to Display the American Flag Act, he's not in the wrong.

FP3 resident Mark DiGiovanni is facing daily fines for hanging an American flag in his condo window. / NICOLAUS CZARNECKI, METRO

"If in fact he is an owner, and this is a clear violation of the federal law, he is entitled to legal action," state Sen. Michael Rush told the Herald. "Under the federal piece, they can put some restrictions, but this is an outright ban. They said, 'We don't want the flag displayed in the window, so get it out.'"

Condo trustee Sean McGrail previously told the Herald that DiGiovanni knew the rules when he moved in, but chose to break them anyway.

"He's trying to rile people up with his fake patriotism," McGrail previously told the Herald. "When he bought it, the condo documents were very clear. In my opinion, he doesn't want to hear 'no.'" METRO

Techies to tackle Pakistan problems

Pakathon. A brainstorming event will solicit ideas on how technology can improve life in Pakistan.

The founding team of Pakathon is made up of, from left, Batool Raza, Adrienne Cochrane, Asad Badruddin, Zheela Qaiser, Osama Badar and Madeeha Channah. / NICOLAUS CZARNECKI, METRO

A group of Boston activists believe technology is key to helping Pakistan tackle its social and humanitarian problems.

Leading up the effort are Asad Badruddin and Zheela Qaiser, the creators of a hackathon-style event called "Pakathon," which will be held at Hack/Reduce in Cambridge Sept. 13-15.

"Just getting people together to work on something and spark that kind of creative energy and cross-collaborate, that in and of itself is the beginning of something positive," said Qaiser.

The conference pairs techies with mentors, giving them 40 hours to create a software or hardware solution that tackles issues of health, violence, energy, education, disaster relief and agriculture. The group with the best idea will get $5,000 to put the project into play, as well as access to mentors, partnerships and non-governmental organizations.

Badruddin, 23, and Qaiser, 24, both grew up in Karachi, and came to Boston to attend college. Having witnessed firsthand the problems plaguing their home nation, the pair decided that the time for action was now.

"We have an idea of the problems [facing Pakistan,] but the next step is to ask, 'What can we do about it?'" said Badruddin.

Organizers said they hope to get more participants on board.

"Hopefully, one or two great ideas will come out of the weekend," said Qaiser. "But I think this will be a spark that catalyzes future events."

Tsarnaev capture pics. Boston Magazine releases more photos

Boston Magazine has released the remaining photographs leaked to the publication that show scenes from the night alleged Boston Marathon bomber Dzhokhar Tsarnaev, 19, was captured in Watertown.

In some photographs, the 19-year-old terror suspect, who was arrested on April 19, is seen emerging from the side of a dry-docked boat. He is also seen getting medical treatment on the ground.

All the photographs were contributed by Massachusetts State Police Sgt. Sean Murphy, who came under fire in July for leaking the first round of the photos.

Murphy said he released the images in response to the August issue of Rolling Stone magazine, which featured Tsarnaev on the cover.

The 25-year veteran was put on restricted duty, then transferred to the state police barracks in Athol and put on the night shift. METRO

Middle East

West could hit Syria in days, envoys tell rebels

Western forces could attack Syria within days, the United States and its allies have told rebels fighting President Bashar al-Assad, opening up new risks in a war that is spreading hatred across the Middle East.

Participants at a meeting in Istanbul told Reuters that U.S. and other diplomats warned Syrian opposition leaders on Monday to expect action that would punish Assad for poison gas attacks — and to be ready to negotiate if his government sues for peace.

British Prime Minister David Cameron, anxious like President Obama not to emulate the Afghan and Iraqi entanglements that beset their predecessors, said any strikes would be "specific," a penalty for the use of chemical weapons and would not drag the allies deeper into a Syrian civil war now in its third year.

He recalled parliament for a debate on Syria tomorrow. REUTERS

Obama, Canada PM agree Syria merits firm response

U.S. President Barack Obama and Canadian Prime Minister Stephen Harper yesterday agreed that the use of chemical weapons in Syria merited a firm, effective and timely response from the international community, a spokesman for Harper said.

The two leaders talked amid mounting signs that Washington and its allies are edging toward a limited use of force against Syrian President Bashar al-Assad's loyalists in the wake of a poison gas attack last week that killed hundreds of civilians. REUTERS Action. A spokesman reiterated that Obama had not made a decision on how the U.S. will respond.

The White House ruled out any military effort to oust Syrian President Bashar al-Assad from power yesterday as President Barack Obama ponders options in response to last week's chemical weapons attack in Syria.

"The options that we are considering are not about regime change," said White House spokesman Jay Carney. "They are about responding to a clear violation of an international standard that prohibits the use of chemical weapons."

Obama is considering cruise missile strikes against Syrian targets in response to the Aug. 21 chemical weapons attack that U.S. officials are increasingly confident was launched by the Syrian government.

Carney said the United States expects to release in coming days a public version of a formal report by the U.S. intelligence community on the use of chemical weapons. The report is expected to conclude the Syrian government was responsible for the attack.

Any attempt at "regime change" by the United States would draw the United States deeply into a conflict that Obama has been determined to avoid. The president has already ruled out putting U.S. troops on the ground in Syria.

Carney said the United States has a variety of options from which to use, not just military options. Most of the talk about Syria in recent days, however, has been about a limited cruise missile attack. REUTERS

Johns. Modest start for Switzerland's first drive-in 'sex boxes'

Greeted by a press pack rather than prostitutes, the first customer to roll up to Switzerland's sex drive-in on opening night took one lap of the facility before making a hasty exit.

The second car, a family vehicle driven by a man in sunglasses under cloudy evening skies, broke down and needed jump-starting in front of a host of photographers sniggering into their cameras.

Zurich authorities had said they expected a modest start to the country's first so-called "sex boxes," a row of drive-in wooden garages on a looping track where clients in cars can visit prostitutes, shielded from prying eyes and security cameras.

The number of prostitutes in the Alpine nation has risen sharply over the last decade, due to the decriminalization of procuring and passive solicitation of sex alongside agreements between Switzerland and the European Union on free movement of people.

The sex boxes, which echo similar drive-in systems in the Netherlands and Germany, are being touted as a way to get large numbers of prostitutes and their clients off Switzerland's otherwise pristine streets.

Between 7 p.m. and 5 a.m., men can cruise along the track and choose a prostitute from shelters before parking in one drive-in boxes. REUTERS

With an estimated annual turnover of around 3.5 billion Swiss francs ($3.79 billion), prostitution has been legal in Switzerland since 1942, with sex workers in Zurich required to have a special permit, health insurance and pay tax.

On anniversary of speech, bells to ring for freedom

Speech. His address is credited with helping spur passage of the landmark Civil Rights Act of 1964.

An address by President Barack Obama and nationwide bell-ringing will cap celebrations today marking the 50th anniversary of civil rights leader Martin Luther King's landmark "I have a dream" speech.

Obama will speak during the "Let Freedom Ring and Call to Action" commemoration on the steps of Washington's Lincoln Memorial, the site of King's address on Aug. 28, 1963, the White House said.

Other speakers include former Presidents Jimmy Carter and Bill Clinton. The ceremony will follow an interfaith service at Shiloh Baptist Church in Washington, organizers said.

The speech by Obama will come as almost half of Americans say much more needs to be done before the color-blind society that King envisioned is realized.

Obama said last week that the legacy of discrimination had left a persistent economic gap between blacks and whites, but that the civil rights movement's impulse for equality had spread to Hispanics, immigrants, gays and others.

The ceremony will include bell-ringing at 3 p.m., 50 years to the minute after King ended his call for racial and economic justice with the words "let freedom ring." REUTERS

1 'N Stink

Yesterday, I wrote about how personally butthurt I felt about the way Justin "Too Good For the Little People Now That I Roll with Jay-Z" Timberlake gave his ex-bandmates the shaft at their big VMA "reunion." I wasn't the only one with mixed feelings.

According to US Magazine, Chris Kirpatrick and co. didn't exactly have glowing things to report.

"All of us getting back together, we remembered what we love about each other and what we hate about each other," Kirkpatrick said, methodically sticking pins into a voodoo doll he'd crafted from tufts of impossibly silky blonde hair he'd collected from Timberlake's dressing room post-show. "It was just a bit of fun."

OK, OK, obviously I'm kidding about that whole hair doll thing. There's no way they'd let Kirkpatrick within 20 feet of Timberlake's dressing room!

Lance Bass didn't have much to say on the subject, either, other than that he felt really "nauseous" the whole time. Whether this was due to stage fright (it's been a while!) or the noxious odor of resentment and defeat (kind of like rotten eggs and cheap cologne), is unclear.

Joe Francis jailed

Here is some news that should come as a surprise to approximately nobody.

Joe Francis, best known as the date-rapey titan behind the date-rapey "Girls Gone Wild" franchise, has been sentenced to jail for assaulting a woman. Because, OF COURSE HE HAS.

Francis — who appeared on the most recent season of "Couples Therapy" (This dude had trouble with his romantic relationship? Weird.) — has been sentenced to at least 270 days in jail for holding three women in his apartment against their will and choking one of them.

My only question here is, how did it take so long for this man to be convicted of something?

The man has been robbing girls of their dignity and future ability to get hired at legitimate places of business for more than a decade now. But somehow he got signatures on release forms from all those girls with blank, rolled-back-in-their-sockets eyes who were willing to bare their bouncing breasts while hammered out of their minds.

4 Jon and Kate plus a lawsuit

Remember Kate Gosselin? The woman who was famous for a couple of minutes for having a thousand kids? No, not the one with the tentacles, the one with the mullet. Yeah, that one!

Gosselin — previously of "Jon and Kate Plus Eight" fame, currently just another sad, harried mom with bad hair — is making headlines again, likely to her immense relief. Because, where does one go after flash-in-the-pan reality TV fame? (The answer is Kmart.)

Kate is suing ex-husband/bonafide creep Jon Gosselin for allegedly hacking into her email to access top-secret information for an eBook that nobody has heard of and nobody will read (because Jon Gosselin wrote it, and because it's an eBook) called "Kate Gosselin: How She Fooled the World."

The only one fooled was you, Jon.

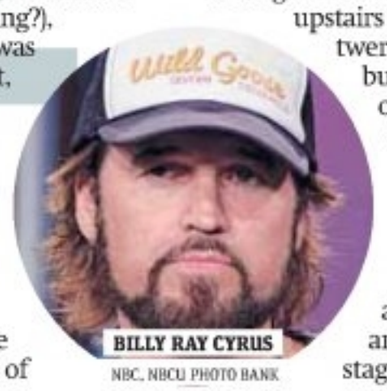
2 That's my girl!

So, while everyone else in the free world was freaking the eff out about Miley's performance at the VMAs Sunday (apparently it was in questionable taste or something?), Billy Ray Cyrus was just all "chill out, geez, take a God break" via Twitter.

Following Hannah Mount-ya-Tana's butt-flapping VMA performance, in the wee early hours of Monday morning (probably because he was up trying to drown the memory of his daughter's bare butt from his brain with whiskey and ketamine), he tweeted "Thanking God for so many blessings tonight. Continue to pray for world peace. More love ...less hate."



BILLY RAY CYRUS

Not that there's anything wrong with thanking the man upstairs for all the good twerk or anything, but does this talk of blessings in conjunction with his half-naked daughter prancing around on a stage remind anyone else of another leery stage father who was just a bit too cool with his daughter flaunting her budding sexuality? (Google "Joe Simpson / Jessica / breasts.)

Creeped out? My job is done here.

Pippi porn star

Here is a very tragic item about the adorable ginger kid best known (only known) for her portrayal of lovable mischief-maker Pippi Longstocking. She's in porn now.

What is it about childhood stardom that breeds a particular strain of adult desperation and low self-esteem? At best, these kids end up on "Celebrity Rehab" or in weird YouTube music videos dressed like Jacko (I'm looking at you, Corey Feldman).

At worst, they end up in porn. No, at worst they end up dead — second worse, porn. Though, let's be honest, most people who get ejaculated upon for a living are pretty much dead on the inside.

TMZ — who somehow get their sticky fingers on every celeb sex tape first — report that they have seen the porn video, starring the now 39-year-old Pippi Longstocking (aka Tami Erin). Also according to TMZ — who always seem to revel just a bit too hard in the sex shaming of once-adorable child stars — the tape is pretty "hard core" (aren't they always?).

The name of this alleged hard core porno has yet to be released, but I've got some ideas. Nippy Longcocking? The Sadventures of Pippy Longboobs? Anyone?

'Wicked' still casts a delightful spell

Review. Despite some missteps on opening night, the production soars.

The good defeats any bad there might be in this production. / PROVIDED

It's been three years since "Wicked" last bewitched the Opera House, but the behemoth blockbuster musical is still as dazzling as ever.

Flying monkeys, smoke and mirrors, witches, munchkins and Broadway-style glitz make the magic in this tale of life in pre-Dorothy Oz come alive. A good part of the magic in this staging of the untold story of Glinda and Elphaba can be attributed to the ornate set, which boasts an enormous Time Dragon Clock, high atop the stage, that breathes fire when one of the witches is up to no good.

Unfortunately — and surprisingly — there were a couple of minor problems on opening night that we're confident have been remedied now that the production is a good few weeks in. The sound lacked the usual rich quality one expects of a production of this scale, rendering the incredible Stephen Schwartz score a bit flat in a few places.

The other issue was that one of the show's two leads, Elphaba, was played by standby Laurel Harris. Harris was so rusty in Act I that while Elphaba and her broom soared sky-high during "Defying Gravity," her vocals did not. Luckily, Harris fared much better in Act II and the audience roared their approval at curtain call. Still, she failed to deliver one of the production's show-stopper moments, which is a shame, as it's always one of the highest notes of a production that is full of them.

Jenn Gambatese was able to pick up some of the slack with her perky portrayal of the good witch Glinda, nailing every comedic moment and delivering a delightful rendition of audience favorite, "Popular."

Likewise, Kim Zimmer — a long-time leading lady on the soap "Guiding Light" — is a joy to behold as the misspeaking Madame Morrible. Curt Hansen similarly enchants as Fiyero, the object of all of the witches' attentions.

Despite any minor problems (all of which, we're sure, can be explained by early production growing pains) it cannot be denied that "Wicked" still possesses the power to cast a firm spell.

ADAM WINGARD

WORKING FOR THE MAN

For years, director, writer, cinematographer (and occasional actor) Adam Wingard has labored in the world of independent horror. After numerous shorts (including the "V/H/S" series), plus festival favorites like "A Horrible Way to Die," he made "You're Next." Written by Simon Barrett, the film is a home invasion thriller with enough loose indie acting — and a sick sense of humor — to make it stand out. Made in 2011, it's finally being given a decent release by Lionsgate as the next "it" horror film.

I read that you were shocked when "You're Next" got a strong audience reception during an early test screening. Were you not trying to make something to cross over?
Going into it, I was actually trying to make something more accessible, something that could be seen in a mainstream light as opposed to the movies we'd done up to this point. Those were all festival-driven. I felt like that was the crowd that understood the kind of things we did. But that world isn't necessarily why I got into filmmaking. As a kid I watched a lot of crazy, big-budget Hollywood movies, horror films and so forth. Those were the kind of things that initially made me want to make movies.

But the film still has a loose style.
I did want to use aspects of what you would normally consider a conventional cinematic language and integrate it into my kind of style. Still, I couldn't rely on overly shaky handheld camera movements and weird editing styles. Normal audience members, they just want to be involved in the story, and they don't want style to bog it down. But sometimes I can't help myself.

There are members of the "mumblecore" scene here, including director Joe Swanberg. How did a more serious, actor-based approach jibe with the horror elements?
The mumblecore thing is about creating reality beyond what you usually see in cinema. You're not picking actors based on a role. You're picking roles based on actors. I wanted to bring that aesthetic to it, and that's what makes it stand out — the fact that you've brought a certain kind of reality you're not used to in these types of films. It's something people haven't seen before, but it feels familiar at the same time.

Are you reluctant to go from indie horror to more studio work?
I feel like as a filmmaker you have to give the studio thing a shot, because at the end of the day every time you make an indie film, you're taking a gamble. You're rolling the dice. Will somebody pick up this film? What will happen to it? Independent producers will screw you over just as badly as anyone else.

MATT PRIGGE

Bonus question

Sloppy with Joe

You've worked with filmmaker Joe Swanberg, not only here but on several other projects. You two seem to have different sensibilities entirely.
I think I kind of opened his eyes to a way of filmmaking that was possibly a little sloppier than he was used to — the kind where you can get it done in a couple days. Working with him has been a mutually enriching experience. I opened his eyes to that kind of film, and he helped me understand what good acting was.

NICK OFFERMAN

A MAN AND HIS MUSTACHE

Nick Offerman may be best known for playing the stone-faced, government-hating Ron Swanson on NBC's "Parks and Recreation," but he's also an accomplished comedian and stage actor (not to mention woodworker). He's currently on tour with his wife Megan Mullally, and her band, but took some time off to talk to the Metro about his show, his new book and his most famous co-star — his 'stache.

What can people expect when they come to see you?
Some cautionary tales. There's a lot of gum-flapping. Some mediocre songs. Some woodworking tips. And some minor nudity.

Minor nudity! Sounds like an exciting show.
Well, you gotta get asses in the seats.

Do you perform with Megan's band at all?
They open with a handful of songs and then I do my bit and then, just when I'm losing the audience and people are beginning to nod off or finger their parking stubs longingly, the band comes out and we wrap the evening up with a couple songs together.

Who would you say is the ideal audience for your upcoming book, "Paddle Your Own Canoe?"
I guess human beings. I think men will really enjoy the book from the point of view of a jackass man like myself, and I think the ladies will enjoy the book in terms of viewing their men through the lens of my writing.

In almost every interview a question comes up about your mustache. Why is the American public so fascinated by it?
It's inexplicable. I am lucky enough to be literally riding the coattails of my mustache and I have the good sense to keep my mouth shut and stand behind it, try to look polite.

Let the mustache do the talking?
Yeah, soon after "Parks and Rec" came on the air, my mustache was signed by CAA and there's a whole set of rules. I'm not allowed to make eye contact with it, and it doesn't return my calls. I have to get hold of its representation if I want to talk about trimming or any sort of grooming.

Do you think it's been ruined by fame or is it the same mustache it always was?
That's a very good question, but I can't really speak to it right now, if you get my drift. There's someone in the car with me that might want to follow up.

Is the canoe on the cover of the book one you crafted?
It is, yeah. That's my first canoe and her name is Huckleberry and she has treated me very well.

Does the canoe also have representation with CAA?
No, the big agencies are not as interested in the wood boats. My canoe's with a smaller boutique agency and mostly looks for commercial work.

As "Parks and Rec" heads into its sixth season, how do you keep Ron Swanson fresh?
Well, to be honest, I'm such a lucky bastard that I don't have to try very hard because I have a team of brilliant writers who keep Ron fresh. They go above and beyond ... and provide us with new stories and new avenues to pursue so that the audience doesn't get sick of the same old personality traits. I just mold my face into a constipated rictus and do my best to deliver the dialogue.

Got milk?

Raw power

Next up for McClelland is raw milk. He says within weeks Apple Street should join just two-dozen other farms in Massachusetts that are licensed to sell strictly regulated raw milk, which organic foodies revere for natural health benefits.

By now, you don't have to be a foodie to know the phrase "farm-to-table." But when chef Frank McClelland says it, it's especially meaningful. For him, and for guests at an ongoing dinner series at his home in Essex, farm-to-table is a matter of mere feet.

McClelland lives on his Apple Street Farm where, since 2009, this top toque from L'Espalier (Boston's only Five Diamond Award-winning restaurant) grows and gathers the fresh organic produce that graces his nightly menus. More than a dozen other restaurants around Boston and the North Shore also source their ingredients from Apple Street, and its ample haul supports rapidly expanding produce and poultry CSA programs: bringing locally raised greens and pasture-raised chicken to those who want to eat well at home, too.

But for McClelland, the farm is home. "I just love the feel of it. It reminds me of when I was a boy," says McClelland, who grew up on his grandparents' working farm in the White Mountains of New Hampshire. (He still uses some of their antique kitchen tools.) That experience largely informed his future career and the farm-to-table philosophy he adopted long before it was a buzzword. "It started my journey in motion of wanting to grow and cook things," he says. "And it really sets your sensibilities when at a very young age you understand where your food comes from."

We talked to McClelland to learn more about the design ingredients that make his piece of rural real estate so unique, to better cultivate our own rustic home aesthetic.

A grand plot

Apple Street Farm sits on a covetable 14 acres in Essex, a former equestrian farm, and is anchored by a gorgeous, quintessential New England farmhouse built in the 1600s: Think gleaming but original wide-plank floors, barn wood walls and a rustic brick hearth where McClelland has been known to fire up pizzas. From its soapstone counters to clear glass-front cabinetry, the country kitchen brings natural elements of the outside, inside: just like McClelland likes it.

A hardworking team

Apple Street Farm is run by McClelland, a farm manager, and three to four workers; they also manage another dozen or so acres of farmland between "satellite fields" offered by other landowners within a mile's radius. Even in an age of tractors and expert farm equipment, it's all "hugely labor intensive," says McClelland. Especially when you're dedicated to running an organic (read: herbicide-free) farm. That route results in larger crop loss and extra work. ("You have to get in there with your hands to manage weeds.") But it also yields healthier and, thanks to his exceptionally nitrogen-rich soil, better-tasting food.

A big harvest

Apple Street Farm grows dozens of produce varieties, from diverse fruits and veggies to herbs and edible flowers. And the whole farm staff is trained in animal husbandry, raising chickens, turkeys and even honeybees. Beekeeping is especially important, he says, because nature's best pollinators increase his yields by as much as 70 percent.

Want to visit the farm? The chef hosts an annual Farm Dinner Series where you can tour the grounds, sip cocktails and eat decadent plates prepared by McClelland. The next one runs Sept. 20-21 with a "Firepit Fiesta" and the season culminates with his "Essex Harvest Feast" Oct. 18-19. Visit www.applestreetfarm.com for info and tickets.

Is the Noise Driving You Crazy?

By Attorney George Warshaw

People who live in apartments and condos expect it to be reasonably quiet. What can you do if the noise from your neighbor won't let you sleep at night?

The answer is different if you are renting an apartment or living in a condo.

If you are a tenant, your landlord has an obligation to provide you an apartment that allows you to live without significant disturbances from other tenants. A tenant, by law, has a right to the "quiet enjoyment" of one's home.

The concept of the tenant's right of "quiet enjoyment" has been included within a particular statute, General Laws chapter 186, section 14. A landlord who violates the quiet enjoyment law may be liable for 3 months' rent as the tenant's minimum damages and have to pay all or part of the tenant's attorney's fees.

A condo owner has a different remedy. Nearly all condominium documents prohibit offensive or noisy conduct by owners, occupants and tenants. A complaint to the condo board could bring about action.

If all else fails and the disturbances severe enough, an owner or tenant harmed by noise can bring a lawsuit against the offending neighbors to restrain what's called a "private nuisance."

While life in the city is never noise free, at least your neighbors shouldn't keep you up at night.

H&M knows you care about swapping out those summery sheer curtains for cozy new ones just as much as you care about scoring the perfect moto jacket for fall — but that you don't want to spend $100 a panel.

The Swedish retailer recently launched H&M home, a line of on-trend textiles and decor that was previously available only in Europe.

Now on www.hm.com — that's right, the fast-fashion brand finally has e-commerce up and running — you can find chic home essentials, including throws, pillows, bed sheets and shower curtains — all in a variety of styles. There are Baroque designs, lace and florals for the Bohemians — including one chic French-inspired storage basket that we've got our eye on — plus digital prints and animal graphics for those who prefer modern flare. If earthy is more your thing, there's plenty of warm Navajo patterns. The best part: The pieces range from $3.95 to $34.95. Time for a home makeover? We think so.

If you're attending World Maker Faire in New York next month, be sure to see the progress Chuck Fletcher has made on his InMoov robot, an open source humanoid robot that anyone can print and motorize.

"I will be bringing a fully articulated and animated 3-D printed humanoid animatronic robot," Fletcher says. "The build is based on the open-source InMoov project by Gael Langevin. This is an amazing project with hundreds of parts and a growing community of makers adding features like eye-tracking, hand and finger control. The build will be complete in time for World Maker Faire. There have been InMoov bots partially assembled at other Maker Faires, but this robot will be a complete upper body build."

Langevin's Thingiverse website (www.thingiverse.com) features part downloads and other people's spin-offs and derivatives.

U.S. Open stars credit these diet and fitness secrets for their peak performances. MEREDITH ENGEL

James Blake (USA)

Get your sleep

"I think being on the road and traveling as much as we do, it's tough with the jet lag and going into the times zones, but you've gotta find a way to get your eight hours at least. And when you do that, you're usually gonna eat better."

Janko Tipsarevic (Serbia)

Go all out

"It's good to feel dead after a fitness practice — not dead, but completely exhausted, because sore body today, stronger body tomorrow. There are some times you think it's too hard, it's too heavy, but it will for sure pay off later on."

Sloane Stephens (USA)

Stretch correctly

"It is a major disappointment if an injury keeps you from playing your best, or at all. I use stretching to minimize that risk. Before a game I like to get my blood pumping, so I do some really active stretching, like jumping from one leg to the next as I stretch out my inner thighs, or bouncing on my tippy toes to stretch out my calves. Post-game it is more important to rid your muscles of lactic acid, so my stretching is not as active and helps my muscles cool down. Most stretches I do after the game include me standing still while working out my muscles."

Jelena Jankovic (Serbia)

Use your own body

"I always do lots of exercises with my own body weight, like lunges, push-ups, pull-ups, things like that."

Get involved

Give a smile

Stephens is working with Listerine's #HealthySmiles program, which will donate $2 for every tweet with a smile emoticon and the hashtag #HealthySmiles. The money will go to Oral Health America's Smiles Across America, which gives dental care to kids in need.

Don't be blue that summer is ending

No cure for end-of-summer blues, Bluemercury could fix fall. / BLUEMERCURY

This fall, Newbury Street is getting a makeover — literally. Bluemercury, a luxury beauty product and spa destination (founded in Georgetown, now with 43 locations nationwide) is opening its first Boston location early this September.

More of a full-service beauty oasis than a store, Bluemercury is all about customer education. Just browsing? That's OK, says co-founder Marla Malcolm Beck: "We're happy to have people leave with samples and just try things. There's no pressure in our environment."

Bluemercury staff are experts in their fields and, according to Beck, excited to teach the tricks of their trade.

"We launch about 100 new products in our stores per month," she says. "So, it's that sort of excitement and passion about beauty products, this idea of the neighborhood store where you can get advice and a great mix of brands."

We asked Beck — who says, "good skin comes first, and makeup second" — for some go-to beauty tips to hold us over until Bluemercury opens its doors next month.

Do you think it's a good idea to switch up your makeup regimen as the seasons change, to go darker or more dramatic in fall and winter?
I think the fall switch is the most important switch because you really need something that brightens your face as the weather gets dull and your skin gets dry. You definitely need a new lip color because your skin tone changes in the fall. You tend to need more coverage of your skin because as our skin tone fades, the hyper-pigmentation shows up even more.

What are some hot lip colors for this coming fall?
The two extremes that we're seeing are the red lip and the nude lip.

What inexpensive products do you recommend for a girl on a budget?
Mario Badescu is a brand we've been carrying forever. ... All of his moisturizers are $18 to $19. Cleansers — the same.

What's one beauty product you believe every woman should own?
Bronzer. ... If you're not going to do anything before you go out the door, you can swipe a little bit of bronzer on your cheeks and on your upper eyelid. NARS Laguna ($36) is a pretty universal bronzer. ... If you're not used to makeup, you'll actually be amazed at what that does for you."

Recommendations

Three essentials

SkinCeuticals Fusion SPF 15 sunblock ($34)
"Overall, SkinCeuticals makes the best sunblock on the market. It's the only thing I'll use on my kids and myself, but this one has a little hint of color. It's almost like having a foundation/sunblock on."

Trish McEvoy High Volume mascara ($31)
"It's my favorite mascara. It's got the Japanese tube formula. Rather than color your eyelashes, like most mascaras, it tubes around. It doesn't flake off, or come off when you're in the ocean. But if you rub it off with water, it comes off, which is a funny thing. That means you don't need all these heavy makeup removers that irritate your eyes."

M-61 Vitablast C ($92)
"Vitamin C is my absolute favorite ingredient of all time because it builds collagen and prevents hyper-pigmentation, and you really feel it in your skin if you use it over time. My favorite — I'm a little biased — is our brand, M-61's Vitablast C."

Don't get mad when your kids take the lead

Re: '"Dreams" a nightmare for parents' (Metro, Aug. 21)
Letter writer Regina Deriso bemoans her "lost" dreams relative to her son pursuing his "dreams." Is this why we have children? So that we can fob off our dreams on them? Is her son his own person or just an extension of her and his father? News flash lady, your son didn't ask to be born. He didn't ask you to give up anything for him. That was a choice you made and the vile you feel can't be healthy. Please learn to let it go and allow your son to live his life, make his choices and be proud of him.

Graduates pointless without jobs

Obama wants to look out for the students who "our higher education institutions exist to serve." Here's a novel idea, sir: How about YOU create some jobs so that our graduates can actually have a paycheck to pay down the debt they incur?

Protest motives in doubt

Re: 'Clean air. Six-day, 60-mile energy march set to protest coal plant' (Metro, Aug. 27)
Metro reports that activists rallying for closure of a coal-fired power plant in Somerset plan a six-day and 60-mile march Wednesday from Fall River to Hyannis. Then Metro adds, "Activists also oppose the Cape Wind project planned for Nantucket Sound." Is this environmentalism or just naked NIMBYism? What's wrong with clean wind generation out at sea? Or is the problem with the views? Count me doubtful of the purity of their motives.

Revs wrapping up summer with postseason hopes intact

MLS. The Revolution have several factors on their side with nine games remaining in the regular season.

There is work to be done, for sure, but the New England Revolution have made a statement. In outscoring opponents 7-1 over their last two games, the Revs have vaulted back into a playoff position and served notice that they have the ability, as much as anyone in the Eastern Conference, to absolutely dominate.

Such is the situation as New England heads into the final nine games of the season. A postseason berth, while nowhere near assured (the Revs currently hold the fifth and final playoff spot in the East), is very much within reach after three straight seasons on the outside looking in.

1 The schedule
The Revs have opportunities in a handful of games against lesser opponents. Of the nine remaining contests, one is against lowly D.C. United and another against almost-as-low Toronto FC Friday night. It ends with a home-and-home set versus Columbus, another bottom-feeder in the East. That's four games against three teams with a combined record of 15-41-19. There are also two meetings with first-place Montreal, which leads New England by five points.

2 Momentum
It doesn't always translate to success in the next game, but the 5-1 whipping of Philadelphia on Sunday has to give head coach Jay Heaps' crew a degree of optimism. While he said he is only focused on getting points when he can, his charges understand the significance of playing so well when wins are so necessary. "This is a huge game, an in-conference game," said goalkeeper Matt Reis, who has started the last two games. "We knew all these games have playoff implications for us now. We're kind of trying to climb the ladder. We did a great job of responding tonight." To illustrate how notable the victory was, consider New England was 0-5-3 in its first eight games against Philly.

Scott Caldwell had an assist against Philly on Sunday. / GETTY IMAGES

3 Scoring punch
Kelyn Rowe scored twice in the rout, one of which is up for MLS Goal of the Week. The 21-year-old midfielder became the second New England player to take home league Player of the Week honors. Also providing plenty of scoring punch of late is Juan Agudelo, who has returned from a knee injury to score three goals in two games. Just 20, Agudelo joins Rowe in an extremely impressive youth movement that signals even better things to come.

It's bubble week for the Patriots

All smiles were directed at Tim Tebow, right, this week at practice despite the quarterback being on the bubble. / BOSTON GLOBE

NFL. The Pats must get their roster down from 75 to 53 players by Saturday afternoon.

While most Patriots TV coverage will be focused on Thursday's Patriots-Giants preseason finale at Gillette Stadium (7:30 p.m., WBZ-TV), the made-for-TV drama that won't be shown on TV will take place Saturday afternoon, when the Pats must cut their roster down from 75 to 53 players.

Bill Belichick has stunned many with his cuts in the days leading up to regular season openers. There was, of course, the Lawyer Milloy release 10 years ago, as well as the pink slips handed to Brandon Meriweather and James Sanders in 2011 — a year in which the team was short on capable players in the secondary.

It won't be stunning to see the Pats cut third-string quarterback Tim Tebow after the Giants game, regardless of how he performs Thursday night. It will be stunning to see the Pats cut safety Adrian Wilson, given his record as a pro and leadership qualities. Wilson has had, by most accounts, a lousy preseason with the Patriots.

Other players on the bubble are running backs Leon Washington, Brandon Bolden and LeGarrette Blount, fullback James Develin, cornerback Ras-I Dowling and tight end Daniel Fells.

Pats notes

- Alfonzo Dennard is scheduled to appear in a Lincoln, Neb., courthouse on Friday, Sept. 6, for a hearing related to a July DUI charge. The hearing is just two days before the Pats' opener.
- If Rob Gronkowski is placed on the physically unable to perform list by the Pats, he will have to miss the first six weeks of the season.
